Samantha And The Mirror

Samantha loved exploring her grandmother's old house. On Halloween, she was wandering through the attic when she found an antique mirror covered in a dusty cloth. Curious, she pulled it off.

At first, she saw only her reflection—then she noticed something strange. Behind her in the mirror, a faint figure waved. Samantha spun around. The attic was empty.

"Who's there?" she whispered. The figure in the mirror raised a finger to its lips and pointed to a small, old trunk in the corner. Samantha opened it and found a diary belonging to a girl named Eleanor who had lived in the house long ago.

The diary told a sad story: Eleanor had disappeared mysteriously on Halloween, and her spirit was trapped in the mirror, unable to move on. Samantha realized she had to help.

Following the diary's instructions, she lit a candle, whispered Eleanor's name, and recited a short rhyme:

"Mirror bright, release the night,
Let the lost find their light."

Slowly, the figure in the mirror smiled. A warm glow filled the attic, and Eleanor stepped out of the mirror, fading gently into the air. "Thank you," the spirit whispered. "Now I can rest."

Samantha sighed with relief. That Halloween, she learned that sometimes, being brave and helping others—even ghosts can be helpful!
