A Gift Of Christmas

It was Christmas Eve in the small town of Snowberry. Bright lights glowed in every window, and children hurried home with their families. In one cozy house at the end of Pine Street lived a girl named Mia. She loved Christmas—the songs, the tree, and the warm cookies her dad baked every year.

That evening, Mia looked out the window and saw something strange. A boy she didn't know was sitting on a bench across the street. He wore a thin jacket and held a small backpack. Snowflakes were falling fast, and the boy shivered in the cold. Mia felt a warm tug in her heart. "He must be freezing," she thought.

Without waiting, Mia grabbed an extra scarf and some cookies from the kitchen. She told her dad what she saw, and together they walked outside. When they reached the boy, Mia smiled and said, "Hi, I'm Mia. Are you okay?" The boy, whose name was Liam, explained that he and his mom had just moved to town, and he didn't know anyone yet.

Mia gently handed Liam the scarf and the cookies. Her dad invited him and his mom to join them for Christmas dinner. Soon, Liam's mom arrived, and they all went inside together. The house filled with laughter, warmth, and the smell of fresh cinnamon rolls. Mia realized that the best part of Christmas wasn't the presents under the tree—it was showing compassion to someone who needed it.
